

Enjoy insurance insights with our new newsletter

We may be on the final stretch of 2025, but there's no time for winding down at NPRe. In fact, when it comes to company news and market views, we're just getting started!

Introducing The NewsPoint, our very first NPRe newsletter. Each quarter, we'll be bringing you the latest news on NPRe, our team insights, market trends, and a whole lot more.

So why not read on to find out what we've been up to.

Market movements

Current geopolitical unrest along with the continued impact of climate change is resulting in risks becoming ever more complex. Along with the long-expected softening of the market, (re)insurance has a vital role to play in providing financial security and stability. We're expecting some rocky moments ahead as we move into 2026.

We're starting to see increased caution in the bank assurance and lending sector, resulting in a reduction in exposures / reluctance to renew or extend loan terms to their previous level. Ultimately this could lead to a shortfall in available business funding.

At NPRe, we're braced for any such moments. Our triage process means we're well prepared for the ups and downs of insurance and finance cycles. You can find out more here: Triage Time: How We Diagnose Risk

News & views

This month, we are mostly loving our newly refreshed website. With bold new imagery and a fresh focus on our clients' needs, why not take a look and let us know what you think.

In June, NPRe's financial results for 2024 were covered by key industry titles, including Reinsurance News, The Insurer, and Business Insurance. The company reported a significant increase in Gross Written Premiums, rising to $400.9 million from $249.4 million in 2023.

We also spoke to Insurance Day who published two pieces from the team. Paul Warren highlighted the many benefits that come when underwriting and actuarial teams closely collaborate – accessing actuarial data, trends, and analysis to inform underwriting decisions in real time. Andy Bye spoke of holding firm amid a softening market, through the power of trusted relationships.

We've also been busy filling our NPRe LinkedIn page with lots of inspiring new content, news, and opinions. Give us a follow, share our posts, and feel free to leave us a comment.

Meet the team

In our first newsletter we say hello to Paul Warren, on NPRe's executive director team.

With almost 30 years in insurance and reinsurance, Paul talks about what he's learned from working with major firms like Prudential, AIG, PwC, and EY, and how those experiences shape his approach at NPRe today. He shares insights on finding the real story behind the numbers, building good governance without the red tape, and keeping teamwork at the heart of success. You can read Paul's full Q&A below.
